

Community Is Stronger Than Cancer

The challenges we've all faced this year have proven more than ever the importance of community. At CSCGP, we have continued to provide free support to thousands of local children, teens, and adults living with cancer. Through our extensive program of support groups, education, mind-body programs and individual counseling, we are working hard to make sure that those facing cancer have the support they need available.

Individuals and families are feeling isolated and are missing major milestone events. Isolation due to COVID-19 can dramatically disrupt life, especially for those living alone with the life changes associated with cancer, as well as those experiencing loss. CSCGP is here—providing connections and free programs online and by phone, keeping members in touch with vital assistance.

Adults are stressed about the economy and job security. Even before the pandemic, many cancer patients faced financial hardships. Now, however, patients also worry about meeting basic needs, such as access to food and housing. CSCGP is here—providing meal deliveries and groceries for families with immuno-compromised members, and providing resources for support.

Children's and teens' lives have been disrupted by COVID-19. With the bulk of schooling moving to the home, the responsibility for online learning falls on parents. This becomes significantly more difficult when a parent is experiencing the side effects of cancer treatments. CSCGP is here—providing kids with free support programs that help with schoolwork, teach coping skills, and create fun, safe social events for families.

For those who are facing the loss of a friend or family member, our staff is available to provide support during this difficult life challenge.

There are so many challenges that cancer patients face on a daily basis. CSCGP is on the forefront of providing comprehensive services to meet the needs of each individual. Staff members are available to answer questions about our free services. Please call 215-441-3290 or visit www.cancersupportphiladelphia.org.
